Dear Mr. Miller,

I am responding on behalf of our Agency to your letter of 22 June 1987.

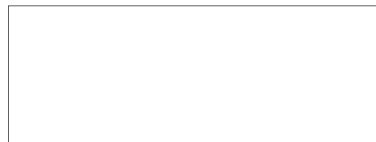

During the past six months, members of my staff have met three times with representatives of the Northern Virginia Red Cross Chapter. In each of these meetings we have discussed ways in which we could enhance our program, and ways in which the Red Cross could assist us. The Red Cross has been very helpful in providing us with new materials to use during our campaign. They have in turn been very impressed with our employee bulletins and other publications which we use to educate and encourage participation by Agency employees in the Red Cross Blood Program.

We have had a 67% increase in blood donors between 1985 and 1986. Comparing our most recent drive, in July 1986, 117 Agency employees donated blood. In July 1987, 137 donated and 29 were first time participants. We contribute this increase to the additional advertising we have been doing.

This Agency recognizes the excellent work of the Red Cross and is committed to the blood program. We will continue in the future, as we have in the past, to encourage employees to donate to this life saving program.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Webster:

The American Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Services are facing a critical shortage of donated blood. As the area's single largest employer, we in the Federal government need to redouble our efforts to support our community.

Your personal support at the CIA will give the Red Cross a much needed "shot in the arm". If each Federal agency can provide top management involvement, an effective coordinator/chairperson, and a network of recruiters to encourage potential donors, our blood donor program can work as well as the Combined Federal Campaign. Specifically, if we add an additional blood drive to our summer programs and strive to achieve increased donations during currently scheduled dates, we can assuage the undersupply in the Red Cross' bloodbank.

Thank you for joining me in supporting our community's crucial needs. Through our leadership, the Federal agencies can play a life-saving role in helping the Red Cross, and our neighbors, survive the critical summer blood shortage.

Sincerely yours,

James C. Miller III
